London

The Forest City of Canada and residentially one of the most beautiful on the continent, was named after the Imperial capital. Many of its streets and suburbs bear names that are famous in old London, such as Pall Mall, Picadilly, Blackfriars, Kensington, etc. Its Court House is modeled after the historic London tower, and in several other respects there is a flavor about the city that is strangely familiar to the Cockney visitor.

London is the centre of one of the richest agricultural districts in the whole world, and its steady growth has been largely due to this fact. It has outgrown its importance as mainly an agricultural centre, however, and has taken full advantage of its unsurpassed railway facilities to entrench itself as the distributing and manufacturing point of the Western Peninsula of Ontario. Every trunk line in Canada has an entrance to this City—The Grand Trunk, Canadian Pacific, Michigan Central and Pere Marquette, and these radiate in every direction. More regular passenger trains daily arrive at and depart from London than any other city in Canada. It is only a few miles from Port Stanley and Lake Erie, and owns a line of steam railway connecting therewith, ensuring the advantage, practically of water freights to manufacturers.

It is one of the three military centres of the Province, and has a Military Training School for militia officers and men. The annual military camps are held here, and a regiment of regular infantry is stationed here, being quartered at Wolseley Barracks. The High Court of Judicature for Ontario hold weekly sittings here, which gives the city an importance as a legal centre, that is second only to Toronto.

Educationally London is in the very front rank, having one of the two Universities outside of Toronto in its midst. There are two colleges, a conservatory of music, a collegiate institute and a splendid system of public and separate schools. London is blessed by an unlimited supply of the purest spring water, and its parks are its pride. These include Springbank, four miles west of the city; Victoria, within two or three blocks of the business centre, and Queens, on the east side, where the famous Western Fair is held annually. All its streets are wide and well paved and covered with a wealth of maple trees. The churches, charitable homes, hospitals and asylums are the equal of any in a city the size of London. There are comparatively few rented houses in London, nearly everyone owning his own home. This makes London a very desirable place for the manufacturer as it reduces the possibility of labor troubles to a minimum.

There are nearly one hundred views in this album, which give a better idea of the beauties and advantages of the city than any word painting could do.
